Models Show Proper Lumbering.

Two models which show how the government sells its timber have just been prepared in Washington, for display at the forest products exposition, to be held in Chicago April 30 to May 9 and in New York May 20 to 30. These models represent an acre of western yellow pine land in a national forest of the southwest before and after logging.

In the model showing the stand before the lumberman goes into it the trees range from those only a few years old to large, overmature, stag-headed individuals more than ready for the ax. In the second model the mature trees and all others larger than a certain diameter have been cut down and made into logs and cordwood. In this, as in all government sales, the stumps are cut low to avoid unnecessary waste, logs are taken to a small diameter well up into the tree, and such material as is not fit for lumber is converted into cordwood. Together, the models show the care which the government requires of lumbermen in felling old trees so that the young growth is not injured. The brush is piled in heaps for burning after the lumber has been removed, in order that the fire menace which foresters say usually follows lumbering may be done away with. The models are on a scale of about one inch to five feet, so that trees approximately 100 feet tall are about 20 inches high in the models.

It is the intention of the forest service to have these models set forth certain points in regard to the timber sales conducted by the government. They will demonstrate, in the first place, that the timber on the national forests is for use; placards tell how it is sold to the highest bidder when it is wanted for commercial purposes, and how it may be given away to local settlers and prospectors for developing homesteads or mines. The models themselves indicate that the timber is cut in such a way as to eliminate all avoidable waste of wood and to secure a continuance of the forest crop, not only for timber production but for the protection of the soil. They further show the fundamental principles applicable to many logging operations, that the mature and overmature trees should be removed, that thriftily growing young trees should be left to produce seed and insure a reproduction of the stand, and that the young growth should be protected from damage in lumbering operations.

The models are supplemented by a graphic chart, which shows by pictured piles of money and by conventional trees of graded size the increase of timber sales on the national forests from 1905 to 1913, inclusive. In 1905 the timber sold from the national forests aggregated 96,000,000 board feet, which brought the government no more than $85,000. Three years later the amount of timber sold increased to nearly 390,000,000 board feet, and the money received rose to $735,000. In 1911 830,000,000 board feet sold for more than $2,000,000, and in 1913 more than 2,000,000,000 feet brought in contracts amounting to $4,500,000. Not all this money was received in any one year, because national forest timber is sold on contracts which range from one to twenty-five years, and it is paid for as cut.

Gov. Colquitt.

Ambition in moderation is not a vice, but in excess it greatly weakens the moral fiber. There are indications that Gov. Colquitt wishes to go to the Senate, and apparently he thinks he would be more likely to get there by playing upon local excitement than by co-operating in the President's efforts to maintain peace.

Texas is one of the most valuable and interesting parts of the United States. Not only its resources and its energies, but its progressiveness in city government and in other ways, have attracted widespread attention. It is so large and so strong that it could easily defeat Mexico alone, but this very strength should make it willing to take a generous view. That the United States is what enables Woodrow Wilson to handle the situation, not with barbarous and outworn pride, but with modern enlightenment, and with an eye to the ultimate welfare of Mexico herself and of our nation.—Harper's Weekly
